Unfortunately, not a € having an image of all the foam pieces before assembly, but this is an important step because I took a great decision. Just sticking a series of straps to the back and painting the orange top ended these. The front armor joins the rear armor with more elastic straps and foam. First I use a pepakura design for the helmet (Software that I highly recommend if a € e á €™™ see it already). I can cut a slit from the right eye and see with both eyes, or leave the helmet with a nice and soft appearance and risk of falling. The seams are kept together with reinforced velcro with hot glue. I did the Gauntlets based on the designer of someone else, á € Build Deathstroke Á™™. This is part 1 of my deathstroke helmet for cosplaying in MCM London Comic-con. Or I could take off my helmet as he walked. These form the sides of the pod. I have to support your hard work here! To finish the helmet, he added the side that was missing and marked a side to prepare him for painting. After using a hot glue pistol to paste all the pieces together, this is the current result: the only inconvenience with the texture on the right side is the inability to create a second eye-hole, and anything that is used To cover that hole, as a little transparent plastic or even some Woná €™™ network to match the texture, and so it will be very obvious that you have a second eye HMMÁ € á €™™ | It seems that á € I have to make a decision. The following is the stressful part: á € cut each piece of foam with a blade so that all the templates cut carefully are now in the form of foam. Most of the suit was made using templates from a very dedicated modeler that created its own Pepakura files and raised Most of them to Etsy. Yes, that sounds good. That is á €™™ á™™ for Part 1. They have a tendency to Without reinforcement. All I used to paste the foam layers to the PVC was hot glue of a hot glue gun. Envelope these each one one Thin foam, and put them on the shoulder. Wrapped the right leg in a sheath, which held the leg together and stopped the velcro that has come undone. Yes, it's a sword, but just for the show... There are no sharp points on this thing! Next, wrapped the section of the handle of the sword in orange foam, and then adjust to draw a design for the black part of the handle. I cut the end of the PVC tube at an angle just over 45 degrees. It's extremely light, but it still looks pretty realistic. I made sure to submit the end to be rounded. The torso is made of two main sections. When the deadline for comic quickly approached, I speeded up the process of building my death disguise. Then I did the shoulders. Etsy no longer supports older versions of your web browser to ensure that user data remains secure. I repeated this process twice to finish with two of these pieces. Like the Part 1 helmet, the rest of the outfit was made using the same EVA foam, apart from being much thinner than the standard width of 1 cm. Others have used PVC pipes, warmed them up and then heat them up and then flattened them to create the sword, but I had a little thin PVC pipe by hand designed to hold electrical wires on the walls of a house, so I didn't have Squash a PVC pipe. In the sections, I cut and flipped the foam to use the texture on its reverse. I painted these completely orange to match DeathStroke's. At this point, he had completed his torso. Next is creating the back and the strapping. The finishing touches painted some old paintball gloves I had. Greetings to all. I then cut out the outside of this frame. After this, I put my hands on some EVA foam (amazing material!) and started tracking the template designs on the foam. For Unique icÁ³ shotgun faces on DeathSuelo's left shoulder, stretch a very thin foam angle over the shoulder plate to represent the strap.
